The Four Panel Craggy Flats Climber has an unusual shape which allows for a diverse range of obstacles to climb up, over, and around. The rotationally molded plastic walls are designed to imitate rough rocky surfaces, and come in both straight and curved sections. There are also painted metal climbing bars with wacky shapes for more of a classic jungle gym experience. The curved and wavy ladders enable kids to climb up and down or sideways, while the disk steps allow easier access to the top parts of the structure for younger or less avid climbers. At its highest point, the structure is less than seven and a half feet tall, which is a safe maximum fall height for school aged children, as long as the designated use zone for the structure has proper surface padding. This safe usage zone is conveniently minimized by the composite shape of the structure, which can safely fit into a space of less than thirty square feet.
