The Six Panel Craggy Mantle Climber features an attractive composite design with three curved protrusions which slope upwards towards a pinnacle at the center. Children can either reach the top by simply scaling the central triangular ladder, or by climbing up along the outer ridges toward the middle, depending on their preference and athletic skill level. The rock walls have plenty of plastic hand grips which allow countless ways to maneuver across them regardless of how far the climber can reach. The ladder sections also allow an easy path to the tops of the walls, as well as a more varied climbing experience. Despite its mountainous appearance, the maximum fall height of the Six Panel Craggy Mantle Climber is less than seven and a half feet, making it a relatively safe yet endlessly engaging climbing challenge for any child between the ages of five and twelve.
