The Plaza Bench Without Back has a simple, but highly functional design complete with everything that a good bench needs and more. The seat is made from 4 six-foot-long recycled plastic Resinwood slats with enough strength to support an impressive amount of weight without cracking or bending. The steel frame has a powder coat finish with a polished silver coloration. The backless model has a few important advantages over the standard version that should be taken into consideration. First is the cost, which is significantly lower than the already reasonably priced standard model. Second, there is no barrier to prevent people from sitting on either side of it, effectively doubling its capacity and allowing people to face in either direction. Third, it is subtler and can be installed in front of gardens or scenery without blocking them from view. If you want the back to rest against, then the Plaza Bench With Back might be the right one.
