When running a playspace for children of various ages, it's important to account for the needs of the youngest children in attendance. Children who are just learning to crawl (or who are barely starting to stand) benefit from having access to activities built just for them. Enter the Sights and Sounds Corner Box, a smartly designed activity panel that is placed on the floor to provide ground level play opportunities. The sloped surface of this interactive box minimizes strain so children can play at an ideal angle to its features. There is a large bright mirror that kids will naturally be drawn to; young children are often fascinated by their own image. A mirror can enable a kid's growth in understanding of their individuality and unique features. Embedded in the center beneath the activity center's mirror is also a durably built sound cylinder. This spinner can be turned over and over to create an intriguing noise.
