The Toddler Sensory Tower is designed to enable access by young children regardless of whether they're wanting to crawl, sit, or stand. Their needs for amusing activity will be met in one of four different spaces, each of which is separated partially by a wall of the installation. Youth can then play in their own zone if they're wanting some alone time or can wander around to see what's happening in one of the other three corners. Kiddos will also be able to see through some of the gaps to the other side or even watch as interactive elements in one area are seen moving in their own. These interactive bits are a variety of colorful outlines, rollers, and other movable components. There are also mirrored and textured panels. As children manipulate these visually stimulating points, they'll also be growing their understanding of shapes and paths. Their senses of sight, sound, and touch will be activated and they'll build up their fine motor skills over time.
