The Movement and Texture Infant Corner Box is an activity center for the youngest children that are just beginning to crawl. It is built for ground-level play and uses a sloped presentation surface to facilitate easy access to the interactive elements. This helps the child minimize strained positioning so they can experience the station for longer periods of time. There are four differently shaped cut-outs indented into the surface of the station and each has a uniquely textured padding inside. This allows the youngster to explore their growing sense of touch and also begin learning about what makes shapes different at the same time. The Movement and Texture Infant Corner Box also has a sequence of beads embedded into a rail within a channel route. These beads can be pushed back and forth along the path without fear of spillage as they encircle the rail completely. This item would be an ideal purchase for a daycare facility, church, or preschool.
