Playground Rubber Mulch Surfacing When it comes to playground surfacing, there are few consistently better options than rubber mulch. Durability and affordability are two words that characterize rubber mulch, and perhaps its biggest advantage when compared to alternate surfacing options like engineered wood fiber mulch is that, when properly maintained, rubber mulch can last for decades. Additionally, rubber mulch has a far lower upfront cost than poured-in-place rubber, and its longevity means that you won't need to make repeat purchases year after year.

Rubber Mulch surfacing requires a surface depth of around six inches to ensure adequate fall protection and shock absorbance, making it an ideal choice for those who want to hone in on playground safety. So long as one keeps a lookout for sticks, debris, and other potential tripping hazards, a playground with properly-installed rubber mulch surfacing is one in which kids can safely swing, slide, and play with their friends.
