When it comes to playing pickleball, perhaps the most fundamental part of the game one will need is, as the name suggests, a pickleball. Fortunately, this set of six indoor pickleballs will provide more than enough opportunities to get active and play some pickleball. Combined with the proper net and paddles, these pickleballs should help facilitate hours of physically active fun. The 26 evenly-drilled holes in each ball cause them to bounce predictably on any hard surface. It's easy to see why pickleball is the fastest growing sport in America; although facially similar to games like tennis and badminton, pickleball's key difference is that the court in which it is played is significantly smaller. What's more, the paddles that players utilize to play pickleball are slightly larger than ping pong paddles, yet are still lightweight enough to be effectively used by just about anyone.
