Imagine two friends getting in their cardio together on the Double Sky Walker and it's all too easy to picture. The Double Sky Walker is a step down from an elliptical machine with freely moving pedals but without the arm workout. The user can walk or run at a comfortable pace while gripping the bar in front of them. The overall design is meant to alleviate stress off of the knees which are normally the most stressed portion of the body when running. The airborne pedals, that fit a large variety of foot sizes, free the user from the pain that comes from the rhythmic pounding on the hard pavement. The Double Sky Walker fits more environments than just an outdoor fitness trek. These are great additions for areas with a large parent population as they can provide an extra option for exercise.
